Hello Kathleen:

My name is Victor, an international nurse currently working as a graduate nurse. Just want to express some ideas about the consultation of the English language of international nurses, I support the new draft, it is highly respected Aussie own highly teaching quality, all the overseas nurses who finished the study in Australia are well trained, well assessed in their placement, they are safe to practice. Although some still have some problems about English, but I believe to improve university teaching and hospital training would better resolve it.

I am trained in Deakin, and I enjoyed my study there, the teachers are very focused on the critical thinking and communication skills, both of which are very important in clinical practice. My university experience enabled me to work well with a team without any issues. Personally, I believe most overseas nurses are very hard working and fully aware of their shortcomings, most of them are doing great in terms of self-directed study and team work. So I support to give them a go, they will be a good workforce.

BEST REGARDS
